

STRIKE MAY TIE UP VESSELS IN BOSTON

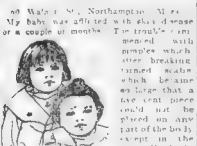

2,000 Longshoremen Vote To-day Whether to Walk Out Tomorrow Morning.

The vote of the 2,000 longshoremen on the waterfront today will determine whether they will strike tomorrow morning. The vote is being taken by ballot, and the result is expected to be a narrow one. The longshoremen are represented by the International Longshoremen's Association, which is in a dispute with the employers over wages and working conditions. The strike would have a serious effect on the shipping business in Boston, as the longshoremen are responsible for the loading and unloading of cargo from the ships.

Bergdoll Agent Shows Economy in Long-Stroke Motor.

A comparison of a long-stroke engine with a four-stroke engine in a light motor is shown in a diagram. The long-stroke engine is shown to be more efficient in using gasoline, as it has a longer stroke and therefore a longer time to compress the mixture, resulting in a more complete combustion. This is particularly evident in the case of the long-stroke engine, which is shown to have a longer stroke than the four-stroke engine.

The New Cowl Dash Car

ONE of our most popular 1913 models is our cowl dash touring car. This is one of the season's "six best sellers." Wherever it has been shown it has met with immediate approval. The graceful cowl adds a touch of completeness and finish to the body, which distinguishes and separates it from the average run of touring cars.

This model is a great favorite abroad—particularly in the big European metropolitan centers, where the demand is always for something more unique without loss of practicability.

The chassis of this car is the same as our famous Model 69—the brief specifications and equipment of which are given above. You can have either a four or a five passenger body.

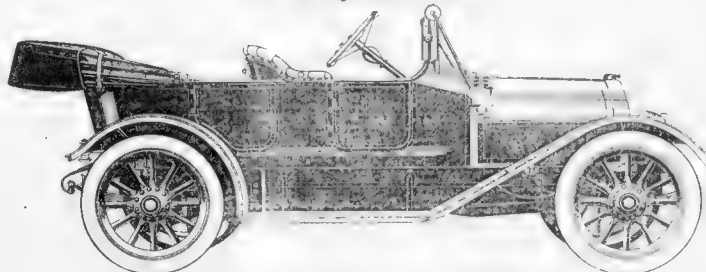

Our allotment of cowl dash touring cars is very limited. We would advise you to have our local dealer give you an immediate demonstration so that if you do not want your car at once, you can book your order for delivery when you are ready for it.

This, like all Overland cars, costs you 30% less than any other similar car manufactured. If we built less than 40,000 cars a year, this model would cost you just that much more.

WHAT is the matter with the Boston Police Department?

During the past six months there have been more cases of apparent demoralization among the patrolmen at the various stations than ever before in the history of the department.

More patrolmen have been on charges of committing highand-miscellaneous offenses than ever before in the history of the department during the same time.

There have been two individual cases of fist fights among officers in one precinct. In another precinct the patrolmen are quarreling among themselves. In still another precinct there have been three cases of patrolmen suspended for having been drunk.

What is the matter with the Boston police department?

Police Commissioner could not be seen in regard to the matter.

Something is Wrong.

THE AMERICAN has been a patrolman and still believes that the Boston Police Department is in a state of demoralization.

He believes that the trouble is in the rank and file of the patrolmen. He believes that the patrolmen are not working in harmony with their superiors.

"The Woman Thou Gavest Me" leads into the most vital subject of our modern social fabric—the marriage relation. It searches in the very sanctuary of a young girl's life for the motives and solution of this great problem, and touches frankly, yet reverently, upon the intimacies of her experiences. In

"The Woman Thou Gavest Me"

Hall Caine exceeds the masterly treatment used by him in his other famed successes, "The Eternal City," "The Christian" and "The Prodigal Son." He is probably without a peer as an author in the world of English literature.

You will be astounded at the thrilling scene in the hotel between Lord Rea and his young wife—and your human sympathies will be aroused for this beautiful girl bar-tered in marriage by a stern father. Read this gripping story in the February number of

Dr. Booker T. Washington, America's Most Distinguished Negro and Director of Tuskegee Institute, Explains What Progress His Race Has Made in the Last Half Century and the Problems Which Must Be Met and Solved in the Future.

The white man has not yet proven that he can live in complete harmony in any part of the United States, even when there are no negroes present. Not only in this true, but it frequently happens that the bitterest and most deadly animosities will be found to exist in communities like those of the Kentucky and Tennessee mountains, where there are almost no colored people.

We must expect in the future, as in the past, outbreaks of lawlessness and other expressions of racial animosity, but I do not believe that there will ever grow up between white people and black people anywhere in the United States feeling of hatred and animosity so intense and bitter as that existing in the fabled of some of the mountain white people. This is a cannot nurse a sentiment of hatred as long or keep it as true as the white man.

The negro in America has demonstrated during the years of his freedom that he can support himself. When Mr. Lincoln was contemplating the freeing of the millions of slaves, a few white people expressed doubt. Some said that the negro would prove a burden in freedom upon the market of the nation. Some said that he could never feed, clothe or shelter himself, and that annual appropriations would have to be made either by the State or the National Government toward his material support. I never saw the days of freedom, as far as I can find out, has the American negro called upon Congress to appropriate a single dollar to be used in providing for him either food, clothing or shelter.

So much for the past. Now as to the future. The most important lesson which the negro must learn in the near future is that of distinguishing between the appearance of progress and progress itself, between the shadow and the substance. He must avoid imitating the vices of the white man; he must exercise a degree of self-control which will enable him to deny himself many of the superficial possessions of civilization and stick doggedly in getting possession of the real things of civilization instead of mere superficialities.

It is a hard thing sometimes to convince a young colored man that he ought not to try to smoke the same priced cigars that the white man smokes; a hard thing, sometimes, to convince him that it is better for him not to try to imitate the white man in purchasing costly and showy clothes. It is a hard thing to convince many young men of my race that the white man or his ancestors, who today wear patent leather shoes had to wear, many years ago, brown shoes; that the white man who has a large bank account today had to suffer privation, had to go hungry, had to go without sufficient clothes, had to get up at four o'clock in the morning, had to struggle patiently until he got the real things of civilization instead of the mere shadow.

In a word, during the next fifty years we must continue to preach the gospel that no race can begin at the top instead of the bottom and succeed, that the mere appearance of civilization and possessions will not take the place of which is real and substantial. We must continue to preach the gospel that it is better for us to be worthy and be denied rights than it is for us to be denied rights when we are unworthy.

We must continue to remind the young colored people that they, like other races, will gain more by an exhibition of a spirit of modesty, simplicity and self-abnegation than by an exhibition of the spirit of overbearing and unnecessary ostentation.

There are some lessons, too, which the white man everywhere must learn in connection with the future of my race. The white man must learn that it is better to have the love and respect of the negro than it is to have his fear and his hatred, that he can get more out of the negro by having confidence in him and sympathizing and helping him than he can by force. The white man must learn everywhere that the mere forcing of the negro into jail, the penitentiary, the chain gang or lynching him will not take the place of education and civilization. The white man everywhere must learn that it is most costly, both to the white man and the negro, to depend upon force to control the negro than it is to depend upon education, religion and general intelligence.

There are a certain class of white people who must learn the lesson that it is not necessary for one race in a community to be kept poor in order that the white man may appear intelligent; that it is not necessary for one race in a community to be kept miserable in order that the white man may enjoy happiness. In proportion, as both races learn the lessons I have indicated, I predict and believe that the next fifty years are going to reveal a degree of progress and racial friendship which will bring to all of us the highest degree of peace and satisfaction.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON

Tuskegee Institute, Alabama.

NOT very long ago I had the privilege of visiting near Mobile, Alabama, a little colony of colored people, several of whom had come from Africa on the last slave ship. One or two of the older ones with whom I talked told me that they remembered how they were captured and put on the slave vessel and how they were landed later in Mobile. I asked one of the oldest if he ever thought of going back to Africa. With a good deal of pathos in his voice, he said:

"Yes, sir, I goes back every night."

Meaning that he dreamed of the old country. Several of the older ones at the time I visited the colony still spoke their tribal language when conversing among themselves. They had many habits that were peculiar to their African tribe. I think I was never made to realize so fully how closely my ancestors were in touch with Africa or how recently my ancestors were barbarians in Africa as I did when I visited this colony.

It is now fifty years since Abraham Lincoln issued his proclamation which gave freedom to a large part of the black people in America. I say a large part, because we must bear in mind that quite a number were not freed until several years later, and there must bear in mind that it was at least two or three years after the issuing of the proclamation before there was much actual freedom experienced by the negro race as a whole. And then after freedom was legally given to the race we spent at least twenty-five years in wandering in the wilderness without any definite knowledge of what to do or how to do it.

It has been, in my opinion, only within the last twenty-five years that the negro has begun to learn what freedom actually means and is and the responsibilities involved. As I shall try to show later, I believe that in the real and substantial things of life more progress has been made within the last twenty or twenty-five years than was made in the first quarter of a century of our freedom.

The negro has been subjected during these fifty years to some of the severest tests that any race can be subjected to in a free republic. I think he has had to prove to the world whether or not it was possible for him to live by the white man's side in a state of freedom. He has not only shown that he can do this during the last fifty years, but he has proven that he can increase in numbers. I think a search into history will reveal the fact that the negro is almost the only race with a dark skin that has ever been permitted to live in close contact with the white man for any number of years. Every other dark race that has tried this experiment has got into difficulties and has decreased in numbers.

The negro has proven his ability not only to increase in numbers in the United States, but he has survived in all kinds of climates, from the hottest to the coldest. One of the most flourishing groups of negroes in America to-day can be found in the Northwestern section of Canada, where the new grain fields are being opened up to the world. The mere fact that an American negro was one of the two civilized human beings that has ever reached the North Pole is well for the negro. He has shown that he can endure the hardships, when called on to do so, of the coldest climate as well as the warmest. The negro has grown from twenty slaves introduced into the state of Virginia in the year 1619, and by natural increase, to about ten millions at the present time. During the last century of his existence in this country the negro has increased in the United States at the same rate that the people in Great Britain have increased.

During his residence in this country the negro has not only proven his ability to increase in numbers but in slavery and in freedom, and the white man for any number of years. The negro has absorbed and is digesting and using the white man's ideas of civilization. He prepares and sells his food in the same way the white man does. He wears the same kind of clothes, has learned to speak the same language, professes the same religion, and honors and fights for, if necessary, the same flag.

The most difficult lesson that the negro has learned during his fifty years of freedom, in my opinion, has been that of respect for labor with the hand. I will not bore the readers of this page with my own experience with the race in trying to teach this lesson, but it has been learned regardless of the fact as to who was instrumental in bringing it about. It was very natural, and the same would have been true of any race, for a people who had spent years in slavery, where labor was forced to enable the idle first labor with the hand was degrading, was in some way associated with slavery. It required years of patient and hard work to impress upon the negro race and the white man as well that in a state of slavery a race could be WORKED, but in a state of freedom people must be taught how to WORK. There is a vast difference between being worked and working.

It was a long, hard struggle to teach the race that an educated man or woman who worked on a farm or in a shop or in a kitchen or laundry was not out of place; but that lesson has been learned in a substantial manner, and can truthfully say that in this part of the South colored people with education no longer consider it degrading to labor with the hand as well as with the head whenever they had it necessary.

In fact, on our farm here at the Tuskegee Institute I can point to several who are college graduates with the degree of A. B. who are just as happy when at work with their students on the farm as they would be in teaching geometry or algebra in the classroom. This idea of the dignity of labor is gradually permeating every community of black people throughout the United States. They have learned that to work with the hand does not mean that the negro is to be prevented from getting all the strength he can out of history or science, literature or even foreign languages, but that the two kinds of development must go together.

The negro during the last fifty years has gained self-respect and self-confidence in the matter of getting property. He has not only done this for himself, but he has convinced the white man everywhere that he can get, keep and use property to advantage. When we became free we owned very little property anywhere in the United States, especially in the Southern States. At the present time a careful investigation reveals the fact that we have built and paid for about 500,000 houses; that we own and operate about 20,000 grocery stores and other business establishments; that we own and operate about 300 drug stores and 64 banks mainly in the Southern States.

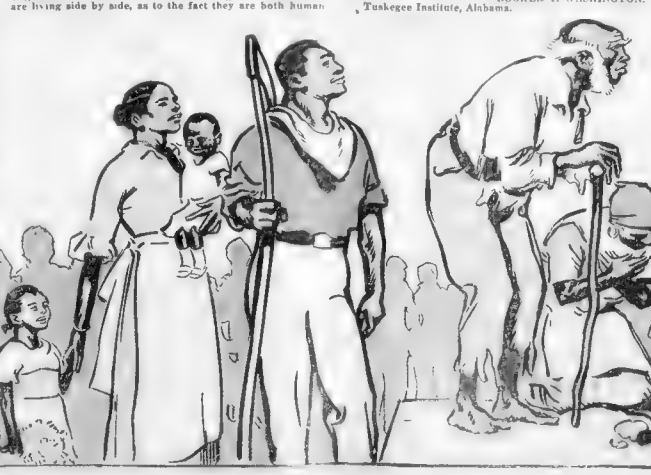

The records of the National Negro Business League as well as the statistics kept by the State and National Government show that we own and pay taxes upon at least $700,000,000 worth of real and personal property. A careful investigation will convince an unprejudiced investigator, I believe, that this is a higher degree of material progress than the Russian serfs have made within the same period of time.

When the Emancipation Proclamation was issued only about 3 per cent of the American negroes could either read or write. At the present time at least 65 per cent of the American negroes can both read and write, and no one can look into the facts without being convinced that the negro has not only gotten education, but he is learning every year more and more to apply this education to the practical matters of life in the community where he lives. It is very sad—and no one is more proud in asserting this fact than Southern white people—that the negro who has learned a trade, who has gotten education and who is a taxpayer in his community, is charged with crime of a serious nature.

The negro has not only gotten property and education during the years of his freedom, but in most communities, notwithstanding the disgraceful outbreaks of race prejudice in some parts of the country, the negro has kept in close touch with the Southern white man and has convinced him that it is not as important to the happiness, safety and prosperity of the white man for him to make progress in these respects as it is to the negro himself. And one of the peculiar things in the South which people living outside of the South do not appreciate is that the average Southern white man not only does not try to prevent the negro from getting property, but he encourages him and helps him in the matter of getting property. Without the advice and help of the Southern white man it would have been impossible for the negro in the South to have secured and held possession of the large amount of property which he enjoys to-day.

There are many evidences that show that the negro has made progress in religious directions, and that he is learning that religion is not merely a thing to be exhibited on Sunday, but to be lived every day in the week, that religion is not merely a thing of feeling but a thing of reason and intelligence as well.

The question is very often asked, Can the two races continue to live in the South side by side? I believe they can. Some people have suggested that in proportion as the negro gets education and thrives in material directions friction will increase. I see no evidence that this is true. But this is due, not so much to the fact that both negro and white man are living side by side, as to the fact they are both human

Father Arnold Pinchard, England's "Fighting Parson," Explains How Christians Are Made Out of the Roughest "Toughs" by First Weakening with Fists Their Worship of Physical Force and Then Reconstructing It into a Spiritual Ideal

And why not? If the facts are clear as enigmas, why not use the facts? If the facts cannot talk, in his method of conviction, why not use the facts? If physical force is the basis of a civilization, how foolish not to understand, how foolish not to understand? We send missionaries to the Heavens to find the outland. Theoretically these missionaries should be pergrounded in the language, the manners, the customs and the beliefs of the people they go to. If they are not pergrounded they will do more harm than good, and certainly not be very effective in their mission. Why should not, the minister be trained in the manners, customs, and beliefs of the undeveloped primitives, who form part of every city, and who need to be brought to the realization of higher truths for the advancement of the race.

The scenes drawn by Hogarth, dreadful as they seem to us, exist around us actually to-day," says Rev. Father Pinchard. "I never look at that harrowing picture of the execution of the idle apprentice without feeling that a good trouncing is a man's lot." The Above is the last scene in the series referred to by Father Pinchard.

At first the idea failed to bear fruit, as they called it "Hooligan," as the English "toughs" are commonly called. They were suspicious. They thought I had set them a kind of trap for them. Finally they came in and they were over and I would put on the gloves with them for a while. As we were talking then all kinds of little incidents came to mind. Then I would make them against each other and they would call it "Loud," in slang phraseology, and these proved very

My memory, nevertheless, of the confidence in teaching apostle's in through realism was inspired to follow that method by the example of our Lord on earth. He had gained the confidence of the multitude by performing His miracles, by showing His power in reality, by being able to teach the word of God.

It is a mistake to think of Christ to feel that if a man be struck on one cheek, he should turn the other. Taken literally, not in my opinion, and not to his enemy, he should turn the other. He should not think that this saying is meant to show that a man should give in that if he is first to turn the other cheek that he should have to be running away.

Upon only one or two occasions was my physical supremacy in the main arena brought to a severe test. A bulky youth of twenty-one years had heard of my methods and came up to the place with the intention of testing me.

Much of the research on the effects of the environment on human health has been devoted to the study of the effects of air pollution, noise, and radiation. However, the effects of the built environment on human health have received much less attention. The built environment is the physical environment that is created by human beings, and it includes the built environment of the city, the built environment of the workplace, and the built environment of the home. The built environment of the city includes the built environment of the city center, the built environment of the city fringe, and the built environment of the city periphery. The built environment of the workplace includes the built environment of the office, the built environment of the factory, and the built environment of the warehouse. The built environment of the home includes the built environment of the house, the built environment of the apartment, and the built environment of the mobile home. The built environment of the city, the built environment of the workplace, and the built environment of the home are all important factors in determining human health. The built environment of the city can affect human health by affecting the level of air pollution, the level of noise, and the level of radiation. The built environment of the workplace can affect human health by affecting the level of stress, the level of physical activity, and the level of social interaction. The Newest Russian Dancer

Latest Photographs of Lydia Kysht, the Czar's Favorite Dancer, Who Has Just Made a Tremendous Hit in London and Paris.

A NEW Russian dancer has made her appearance on the stage of the world. Her name is Lydia Kysht. She has set great gatherings of amusement lovers in London and Paris wild with admiration and emotion. She has eclipsed even Anna Pavlova and Ida Rubinstein. Like Pavlova and Rubinstein, Lydia Kysht was trained for the Czar's Imperial Ballet Corps at St. Petersburg. That is the most honored, brilliant and lucrative career that Russia offers. The most beautiful girls in the land are trained to it almost from childhood. The Russian grand dukes and grandees take even more than a Turkish pasha's delight in Oriental dancing. The beautiful dancers are the pets of society and enjoy every luxury in a land where the ordinary worker is but a slave. A graceful flourish may bring the dancer next day a sparkling ring; an unusually expressive pointing of the toe will catch a diamond pendant, and a two-foot leap may land her fairly upon a diamond tiara. The Czar has gazed at Lydia Kysht with delight and Emperor William has followed in his footsteps. The Czar is intensely chagrined at her leaving Russia. The Russian dance is a curious mingling of Oriental and Occidental allurement which, presented suddenly to the eyes of Europeans and Americans, has proved overwhelmingly fascinating. Thus Europe and America have given the dancers even greater rewards than the Czar's minions. The dancing of Lydia Kysht is amazing. A long, sinuous glide in the waltz changes instantly to the mad tarantella. One beholds her for the moment in a maze of intricate whirlings; the next, she has gone and come back again, costumed anew, and, with seeming nonchalance, evokes the full breadth of a fifty foot stage in, it seems, impossible bounds. She is the virtuoso of the dance and yet its poet. What Paderewski is to other piano technicians Kysht is to her colleagues of the dance. As Paderewski draws from his instrument lucious tones, so does this captivating Russian reveal hidden fire, smoldering poetic ecstasies of the dance she is playing upon. With arched instep, elevated toe, proudly poised body and aristocratically held head she prances to the footlights there is felt a thrill from the magnetic allurement of the radiance, like a wireless instrument sounding a call to all instruments within its zone. There are tongues in her toes, in her legs, in her feet. The ends of those long, artistically turned fingers flash messages; though she be vocally silent, her whole being speaks. At times when she is at the climax of her dazzling dances she appears a sort of ethereal body, let released from the earth. And Lydia Kysht is coming to America.

THIS ensuing interesting and illuminating article is written by an extremely prominent young patron of fashionable society who has this year ended his annual dance, one of the events of the New York season, for the first time.

He writes:

"I have been thinking much lately about my family. So wrote I because of a conviction that the affairs of the world are being run by a few families."

The writer goes on to give a picture of the pulpit and other outsiders has not been understood, and he says:

But "even communications corrupt good manners," and the freedom which has followed as a natural consequence of the unrestrained movements of the dances have forced us to take action.

Consequently a number of us have petitioned together to formulate a set of "new rules" which although when you read them you may think them a little harsh, at the dance hall than a ballroom are, assure you, the plain truth, and have agreed on a course of action.

"Our Eastern Coast a Tropic Garden--But England a Frozen Waste"

THE GULF STREAM, the great ocean highway, is a factor of no small importance in the life of the world. It is the great artery of the North Atlantic, and its flow is the lifeblood of the civilization of the North Atlantic. It is the great artery of the North Atlantic, and its flow is the lifeblood of the civilization of the North Atlantic. It is the great artery of the North Atlantic, and its flow is the lifeblood of the civilization of the North Atlantic.

By Prof. Garrett P. Serviss
—the Distinguished American Astronomer.

For just as England is indebted to a current for her climate, so the Middle Atlantic and New England States are now indebted to another for theirs. As the Gulf Stream flows upward nearly parallel with the American coast, it meets the cold Labrador current coming down from Baffin's Bay, west of Greenland. The current here the coast and brings the fleets of whalers that crowd the coast of the Atlantic northward. It is the Gulf Stream that keeps the ice from the coast of the United States and keeps the ice from the coast of the United States.

The effect would be to raise the temperature along the whole Atlantic Coast, Florida and the Carolinas, would be hotter, New York and Long Island would be warmer, even Nova Scotia and Newfoundland would feel the effects and be turned perhaps into Winterless, flowery paradises! The effects would, of course, be confined to the Atlantic Coast belt, for the circulation of the air in the Northern Hemisphere is such that the great low plains of the West lying behind the Appalachian range would continue to enjoy about the same temperature as at present. The present climate of England is due to the Gulf Stream. It is itself an accident. Considering its geographical position, England has no natural right to the possession of a genial climate. To understand this we have only to remember that the latitude of London corresponds to that of Labrador and the lower part of Hudson Bay, and that Vladivostok, Siberia, with its intense cold, is as far from the equator as London is from the Arctic circle.

How the Labrador Jetty Would Change the World's Climate

CARROLL LIVINGSTON RIKER, a mechanical engineer of Brooklyn, has put forward a remarkable project for changing the climate of the Gulf Stream. At a recent session of the New York Academy of Sciences, Mr. Riker presented a paper in which he outlined his plan. He stated that his plan was to build a jetty across the Gulf Stream, which would divert the current northward, thus changing the climate of the Gulf Stream. He stated that his plan was to build a jetty across the Gulf Stream, which would divert the current northward, thus changing the climate of the Gulf Stream.

Considerable indignation is expressed in England that Americans should plan to divert the British climate, and British supremacy by an engineering undertaking which is at present rather doubtful. The English doubters realize that Newfoundland, though a British colony, would probably consent to the jetty, for it would benefit the climate of the colony, which is at present rather bad. There would be an extremely difficult problem for British statesmen to face.

Most of the large sources which infest the western shore of the Gulf Stream, the head portion of the Grand Bank, where the jetty would be built, are situated upon the edge of the Grand Bank, upon a shelf which is only 100 miles wide, the large ones that go south pass through the 100-foot channel about twenty miles wide and east of Cape Hatteras, where the jetty would be built. The jetty would be built upon the edge of the Grand Bank, upon a shelf which is only 100 miles wide, the large ones that go south pass through the 100-foot channel about twenty miles wide and east of Cape Hatteras, where the jetty would be built.

The melting of the northern ice would increase the amount of water in the ocean and this by the operation of mechanical laws would increase the circumference of the world of the equator. It is well known that the problem is one that seriously concerns every nation in the world. Mr. Riker's project, which has been carefully thought out, contains many interesting features besides those already mentioned. He estimates that the expense of the jetty would not be more than $100,000,000, and that many much less would be largely built by the forces of nature.

The Gulf Stream, occupying the entire depth over the top of the Grand Bank, would largely eliminate the great bands of cold water rising there, though, on the eastern side, and flowing south of the Finnish Cap, where between which and through the depositing of the sand and bottom material upon it by the action of the tide. Mr. Riker has had much experience in building breakwaters in the Gulf, and cites extraordinary examples of the operation of the tides in assisting these constructions.

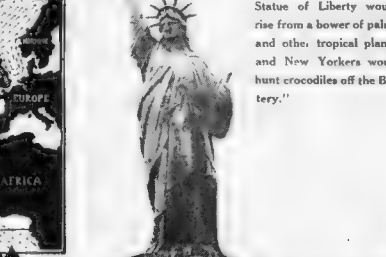

A fore of rough rock would be laid upon the bottom and this would be built up

The possible climatic effects upon the northern hemisphere, such as a projected conservation of the heat of the Gulf Stream are beyond conception. Referring again to Pillsbury's estimated flow of ninety billion cubic yards per hour passing Cape Florida, the heat passing north at that point estimated between seventy and thirty-five degrees, would melt eighteen billion cubic yards of ice per hour, equivalent to about sixteen hundred square miles of ice ten feet thick per hour, or an amount of ice of that thickness equal to the entire Polar Sea, estimated at two million square miles, in less than forty-five days.

her that the latitude of London corresponds to that of Labrador and the lower part of Hudson Bay, and that Vladivostok, Siberia, with its intense cold, is as far from the equator as London is from the Arctic circle. In central England the sun at the equinox does not rise more than 23 degrees above the horizon, while in the United States it rises 43 degrees. At the Summer solstice the sun is 23 degrees above the horizon in England and 43 degrees in the United States. At the Winter solstice the sun is 23 degrees below the horizon in England and 43 degrees below the horizon in the United States. The difference in the amount of water flowing in the Gulf Stream, and in consequence, the lack of heat supplied directly by the sun in a latitude so far north. It raises the temperature over thousands of square miles by bringing heat from the equatorial regions.

For her horse, Miss A. had many experiments. She tried the peach cane advised at the German baths. Every day she ate peaches at regular intervals. On this diet she rapidly lost flesh. She then tried the apples with seeds, and for the same time lost more weight. She then tried the milk diet, on which she lost ten pounds for nearly loss of weight.

When I find myself too heavy to be healthy, I begin to eat apples, and to become cumbersome, I begin to eat a strictly milk diet. I live for four or eight days to three weeks on milk, according to the amount of flesh I wish to lose. The reduction rate is mathematical. As soon as I feel that I am doing nothing but lose I stop. I find that a milk diet of three or four to five days is enough as beginning in any case and after that I live on milk one day, then on fruit one day, and so on, until I lose two pounds or four that week.

"I take milk milk, because the results are so rapid. I have been on this diet and begin with one glass, take another at nine and a third at twelve. I have been on it many, you see. I have a box of milk

HAVE YOU asked whether it is possible that the Titanic is now coming back to the surface and that at the bottom of the ocean. It has been suggested (as Mr. B. B. has not yet read the paper) that the Titanic is now floating some fathoms off the surface, unable to sink any further on account of the great quantity of water at that great depth.

Based upon this belief that the Titanic could not sink at the bottom of the great d-n-o-y of the water, it is contended that the vessel may be now rising to the surface, and that it will be pushed by a current which flows from Cuba toward the west coast of the United States. This deep ocean current is the surface water in which the Titanic sank naturally, flows to the eastward.

It is not possible to say whether this current would be strong enough to expel the Titanic from the bottom of the sea in the dense water.

My own personal belief is that the Titanic sank right where it is now, and that it will never rise. (It is advanced by some of intelligence it is worth while going into the water again.)

I do not know the exact recorded depth of the Atlantic at the spot where the Titanic sank, but it is said to be over 2,000 fathoms deep, and that is over two miles. It is probable that the vessel sank at the bottom of the ocean in one hour, but may possibly have taken an hour to get there. The reasons for this conclusion are:

A heavy body falling in a vacuum from a height of two miles to the surface of the earth—that is to say, through a space of two miles—would fall at a rate which one can imagine, although such Empty Physicalist.

Vacuum does not exist on our earth — a falling ball would reach the ground or bottom of the sea in a very short time, and would suffer with enormous velocity; nature at the rate of about one-sixth of a mile per second, the time occupied in the final velocity attained, whether the falling body were a stone or a feather, would be the same. Should the shape of the falling body matter, a sphere would fall at the same rate as a cylinder, and so on. The vacuum is not what is called a true, truly empty space, but a space in which there is no material as far as to displace any other material, and so on. The vacuum is not perceived to friction. A fairly complete vacuum is not possible on our earth, and in long glass tubes, by pushing out the air, and the facts I have stated have been proved by experiment, and are a scientific measurement.

When atmosphere left—the gas consisted of a mixture of nitrogen and oxygen, and the air is composed of oxygen and nitrogen, there is a certain amount of resistance to the passage of the body. We can reach the form of the body of what is the resistance whatever we feel in walking against the wind or even standing against it.

When there is a resisting medium, such as the air—through which a falling body moves, the resistance is not negligible, and becomes very important as affecting its rate of fall. If it exposes a broad surface to the air, the resistance is increased, and the fall of the body almost indefinitely retarded, and it is not possible to make the normal movement, as in an open place.

Further, being a "liquid," contrasts in important respects, affecting the nature

[illegible]

But probably a good deal of air is still in the water, and it is only as the water rises and the partitions of the structure are broken that the air is released. The enclosed air escapes, or is compressed to a dense condition. So that at first sinkers rise with a very slow motion, displacing the water, as a solid mass of iron of the same shape and volume, but with a much greater weight. As all her cavities are filled by water, she opposes less specific gravity to the water than a solid mass of iron of the same shape would oppose. This makes her rise more slowly. The whole mass or less specific gravity, the resistance to her rise, is the weight of the water displaced by her movements and oscillations caused by rise and fall meeting the resistance of the water. The weight of the water displaced by solid iron is 700 lbs. per cubic foot. The water in the tank filled with water, except for a little compressed air left there, and there is sinking, she is about twice as heavy as for air. The delay in raising two miles would probably not amount to more than half an hour, and the weight of the water displaced taken by the sounding weight.

A notion, I find, exists that the sea-water is heavier than the fresh-water of the river, and that before the ship had sunk to the bottom she would be in water lighter than the water she was in. This is a gross error, and the notion of specific gravity—that she would cause to sink altogether by being heavier—is heavier than the equal bulk of sea-water. The other erroneous notion is that water being heavier than air, it would sink. Both these mistakes are due to the erroneous belief that liquids are like gases, com-

A good business man is the man who can direct the wheels of industry, who can draw a trial balance between his income and his expense account and who can measure his own ability on the yardstick of endurance.

The business man would absorb enough information on these subjects to extend his period of longevity and usefulness many years if they were taught in our public schools or were matters of general knowledge. The routine life of the average business man is about as follows:

A friend may come in, or he may go cigar to visit, then comes the soothing and soporiferous cigar, which usually has been his companion since breakfast. The market, the business, the chances for making or losing dollars is the topic of discussion. He is in the power of his master, "business," and must do him continual obedi-

Then the priest handed the bride a scarlet veil (flammeum nuptiale), a relic of Roman marriage customs, pronouncing a special appropriate blessing. This scene and part of the ceremony is depicted God's throne, and God will grant you joy!" As a rule the communion concluded the wedding ceremonies, and the wedded pair left the church with wreaths upon their heads, often made of precious metals and afterward preserved in the church.

Cyprian, one of the ancient Fathers of the Church, relates that a feast was spread in the bride's home, and that excesses sometimes followed, to which this holy man took exception.

No doubt be adopted some insignia quite in keeping with all this. Just what designs will finally be adopted by the War Department after Congress takes some action is a matter of conjecture, but it is going to prove interesting because of the many artistic designs which could be used. Here is an opportunity for patriotic artists to present Uncle Sam with a series of tentative designs for this branch of the army.

Tea Cup Crowns

Hats are still very small and hardly show any brim at all. Fantasies in parades and aigrettes in every shape are placed at an angle from a point in the brim. This point generally comes toward the back. Pearls (on the evening) are draped in every way—but never just worn around the neck.

Fur is worn round the waist—ermine, especially, has been seen in the evening draped round the waist as a waistband. Chinchilla, sable and ermine have been used in like manner. Fur is also used, even draped through the hair.

Evening dresses are all worn opened at the feet and draped up to show a great deal of ankle and no petticoats are seen.

Turbans swathed tightly round the head with a jewel placed at the side are still seen about; often a long thin paradise or two, going in opposite directions, rise from this jeweled ornament.

Stockings are always plain and flesh color (in the evening) and shoes are of brocade or shades that occur round the waist, or in the turban, and heels are again of different shade than the pumps.

ONE of the great points in fashion is the "informal" look. I am sure that when creating these designs, each detail is carefully considered, and a marvelous evening gown is the result.

The theory is, of course, that the woman wears the "informal" look, but today the "informal" look is the one that is most popular. I have seen many of these gowns in the last few days, and I am sure that they are the most beautiful I have ever seen.

In the three costumes that I am showing you this week, the "informal" look is the one that is most prominent. The hair and the slippers are much more important in the "informal" look than in the "formal" look.

In the first figure, the costume is "informal" in the sense that it is a simple, elegant gown, and the hair is styled in a simple, elegant manner.

MY SECRETS OF BEAUTY—By Mme. Lina Cavaleri, the Most Famous Living Beauty.

No. 213—The American Blemish

THERE is an American blemish. It is not one of the blemishes that are common to all nations, but it is a blemish that is peculiar to the American race.

I should like the American woman to be free from this fault. It is a fault that is not only a blemish, but it is also a fault that is a source of much trouble and discomfort.

The American woman is often afflicted with this blemish. It is a blemish that is not only a blemish, but it is also a fault that is a source of much trouble and discomfort.

Perhaps your nervousness is caused by overeating or under feeding. Both may produce a disturbed condition of the face, the deep, gray lines between the eyebrows and a little too much may cause violent nervousness, which is irritable.

Perhaps the nervousness for which you blame insomnia is its cause. Let more fresh air into your room, or sleep in a room where you have better facilities for ventilation.

Be sure that your bedclothing is not too heavy and draping. Keep warm by all means, but let the bed clothing be light in weight.

Study your diet. Eat only what agrees with you, and eat as lightly as you can while giving the body as much nourishment as it needs. Remember that it requires a great deal of vitality and nervous energy to digest a huge meal. Conserve that energy.

Leave that to out of your cereals and to nature. The figure develops into mature roundness much later in some girls than others.

C. R. writes a pathetic description of her hirsute visage. "If I look like this at nineteen what will I be like at twenty-five?" she wails. "I cannot possibly use electrolysis."

I have repeatedly said electrolysis is the only approach to certainty of removing superfluous hair. That is effective because in most instances it destroys the roots.

This lotion is one of the temporary means employed in France: Ray ram, 4 oz.; Salicylic acid, 10 grains.

Apply night and morning with a piece of absorbent cotton. Leave the liquid to dry on. If the spot begins to grow rough stop the applications and apply a salve, at the outset.

EMPEROR IS PROUD OF PROSE INSUP OF COURT WOMEN

William Is Credited with Having the Finest Corps of Amazons in the World.

STARS IN HUNTING FIELD

From the Empress and Crown
Princess Down, All Are Considered Wonders in the Saddle.

BERLIN, Feb. 8.—Emperor William of Germany has the finest corps of amazons in the world. He himself, an accomplished and daring rider, has a personal interest in the corps, the German monarch is proud of the women of the court and of the nobility who displayed the recklessness of hunters by spending their months over foot fences and tree-top obstacles.

From the Empress down to the Princess Victoria Louise, and from the corps of amazons who were famous in the hunting field, this most brilliant corps of women riders is recruited every year for the imperial hunt, but not until this year have the intended equestrian exercises been so successful.

The performance on the track of the wild horse have been first class October and will continue until the first snow covers the great stretches of Holstein.

Compliments from the Emperor. At all the strenuous hunts of the past two weeks the women riders have been conspicuous in the large fields, and on several occasions have special compliments and honors been heaped upon the only women riders by the Emperor.

No ditch seemed too wide, no fence too awkward, when the eyes of the monarch swept the plough and pasture, and every incident for future praise or criticism. And in the manner the German monarch follows of the hunt, the women riders by imperial appointment, are likely to develop into the finest corps of priority riders in Europe.

The Emperor usually takes part in the hunt, and the women riders are not without a share in the matter of the hunt. The Emperor has the most beautiful horses in the world, and the women riders are not without a share in the matter of the hunt.

Princess Is a Fine Rider. One of the court ladies the other day said the Emperor's only daughter, the Princess Victoria Louise, is likely to outclass her distinguished father in equestrianism. The young woman, who is not yet sixteen, is a fine rider, and is likely to outclass her distinguished father in equestrianism.

Emperor Takes His Revenge. But this year His Majesty has his revenge. When the hunting season was over, the Emperor took his revenge on the women riders by making them ride a snow-white horse and never to be seen again.

"Rich American" Again Revived as London "Bogey"

Rumor That One Will Buy Duke of Sutherland's House Believed Advertising Dodge.

SPECIAL CABLE TO SUNDAY AMERICAN.
LONDON, Feb. 8.—Once more rumors are afloat of an American bidder for Stafford House, the Duke of Sutherland's town residence, and, it being impossible to obtain any definite information regarding this American bidder's identity, it is a fair inference that the rumors are merely the same game that has often been used to advertise and incidentally to flatter the price of the old masters which come into the market and have to be "saved to England."

The fact seems to be that the Duke wants to get rid of his historic residence, which has been on the market privately since last year, but this week the Duke instructed a firm of West End real estate agents to endeavor to dispose of the house. So far the firm's efforts have been unavailing, although one member said it might have been sold over his head.

The report that Sir William Lever, the English oil king, has acquired the place and will make it a national art treasure house, seems to support the theory that the American bidder's story was mere nonsense. Sir William keeps a famous collection on the matter, and there is also no confirmation that Mrs. Miller Graham, of California, is the purchaser.

As to Otto Kahn, once mentioned as the possible owner of Stafford House, he has now rented for a year St. Dunstan's Lodge, London, a beautiful house in Regents Park, where Mr. Kahn, who long has been laying plans for storming London society, will give entertainments next season that are expected to outshine anything hitherto attempted by Americans in London.

St. Dunstan's Lodge stands amid beautiful gardens and is like a four-story house set down in London. Although it is only ten minutes in an auto from Piccadilly, from some parts of the gardens not a house is visible. It has been the scene of wonderful balls and garden parties, and is a beautiful place in the past. The reception rooms contain some valuable pictures, and all open into one another.

The Kahn's two weeks ago had three English residences on hand. They had been taken to the summer at Cranbury Park, Earl Essex's seat in Hampshire. Then Mrs. Kahn took a fancy to Mr. Baldwin's house in London, and she had House Verulam and rented it, but it proved not large enough for her great entertaining plans.

Lord St. Levan Orders Sailor Guards
For Tourists Who Visit His Romantic Island Home.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—Lord St. Levan, who has just returned to his romantic island home of the coast of Cornwall, has with him a small army of sailor guards. He has ordered the sailor guards to be on duty to protect the island from tourists who come from all parts of the country to see St. Michael's Mount, and to see the castle which has been used to see the chapel and not any part of the house.

This will be a great loss to many of the tourists who visit the island. The reason given by Lord St. Levan is that tourists who visit the house as if it were a place of interest, and that the island is a place of interest, and that the island is a place of interest.

The gardens were closed to the public, and the island was closed to the public. The gardens were closed to the public, and the island was closed to the public.

WILL VISIT UNITED STATES
By C. DE VIDAL HUNOT.

BERLIN, Feb. 8.—When the police secretary of Franz Lehar informed me that the famous composer would see me in his apartment at the Hotel de Ville, I was surprised to find a man with a Bohemian countenance set upon the fragile frame of a thin man.

I thought I would find in the appearance of the author of the "Merry Widow" some signs of the Bohemian life, but I was disappointed. He was a man of the world, and he was a man of the world.

He was a man of the world, and he was a man of the world. He was a man of the world, and he was a man of the world.
